IIT Madras retains top spot in HRD rankings

7 IITs in top 10 of NIRF list; IISc and JNU best universities

Indian Institute of Technology (IIT) Madras retained the top spot as India's best institute in both the 'Overall' and 'Engineering' categories in the latest National Institutional Rankings Framework (NIRF) 2020 announced by the Ministry of Human Resource Development (MHRD) virtually on Thursday.

This is the second consecutive year in the overall category and fifth in the engineering category that IIT Madras, identified as an 'Institute of Eminence', has bagged the top rank.

Following IIT Madras were Indian Institute of Science (IISc) Bangalore, IIT Delhi, IIT Bombay, and IIT Kharagpur retaining their second, third, fourth, and fifth ranks, respectively, as last year.

Union Minister of Human Resource Development (MHRD) Ramesh Pokhriyal said the MHRD will create an enabling situation where institutes from across the globe will want to be part of the Indian NIRF Rankings.

In other leading categories such as universities, engineering and management, institutes like IISc, IIT Madras, and IIT Bombay took the top spots. The other top four institutions ranked in the university category included Jawaharlal Nehru University, Banaras Hindu University, Amrita Vishwa Vidyapeetham, and Jadavpur University, while in engineering, the likes of IIT Delhi, IIT Bombay, IIT Kanpur, and IIT Kharagpur comprised the top five ranks. In management, IIT-Ahmedabad improved its position from second spot in 2019 to top spot in 2020, pipping IIM Bangalore which took the second rank, followed by IIM Calcutta, IIM Lucknow, and IIT Kharagpur.

HOW IS THE JOSH OF PUBLIC & EMPLOYEE IN REVIVING THE INDIAN ECONOMY?

In conversation with

KAPIL KHANDELWAL
Director, EquNev Capital, Managing Partner Toro Finserve LLP

The Josh Paradox

In 1970, George Gallup tried to conduct poll of the world covering two-thirds of world population focused more on the issues, we're dealing with now: How people are living their lives? In 2015, we started to build consistent primary sampling units across 150 plus countries - The World Poll. Since 2015 we tracked in 96% of the world's population. India looks very concerning as life evaluation metrics has been declining gradually for five years. In November 2019, there was a very significant dip, not only in people's assessment of their current and future life. One of the conundrums we've been trying to understand is where the conversation turns to politics is PM Modi's approval ratings despite the fact that people's life evaluation ratings have been plummeting. We are trying to understand this on so many levels. The answer depends is local but one of the challenges is in using life evaluation metrics to answer political questions. Social media plays a huge role in how people are engaging with and perceptions of their leadership. The Covid crisis just after a series of economic challenges India faced whether the demonetization policy that created a little bit of turbulence. For Government even more recent events that we've seen since past November with protests for various policies, it's really important for us to see how citizens will continue to evaluate their own lives despite the narrative that Leaders are presenting for how they are managing the crisis. At Gallup, since our inception, we will always remain neutral and non-partisan. India does have this discrepancy where life evaluation metrics, financial, economic all continue to decline despite the fact that leadership approval is holding steady. Post Covid data is in nascent phase. The Covid crisis and lockdown has come at a very politically opportune moment, for leadership who was already facing a public that was pretty let down and remains let pretty down. Indian economy and the Indian people are very resilient. We've seen many hills and valleys throughout past 15 years we've been polling in India. There's nothing to say that as India continues to open up again things can't turn around economically and tend to have the biggest impact on people's perceptions within India. There is no way to skirt around other political, socio-cultural challenges that India was facing just before Covid.

INDIA WAS MAKING PROGRESS ON ALL THREE OF THOSE SDGS WE TRACK. THE CHALLENGES GOING TO BE ACCESS TO FOOD AND PEOPLE SLIPPING BACK INTO POVERTY SINCE THIS COVID CRISIS.

How is US Public Josh for India versus Chinese Trade?

We've been polling Americans for generations on their attitudes on free trade, particularly trade with different parts of the world. President Trump has made trade really central part of his rhetoric, his policy decisions, his positioning with China has been more aggressive than we've seen from really any Presidents. We issued a few months ago a report called Trade in the Era of Trump and it shows different generations of Americans, their perceptions on the role of trade which is something good or bad for America? We find is Americans are very pro trade despite the rhetoric of the past several years, US have remained relatively positive on trade. Americans think international trade enables them to access goods at a cheaper cost and is a net positive for the US economy. When asked, about international trade and jobs in America, they are certainly concerned and that's where we see the most sort of isolationist if you will responses to trade questions. Any change it's really been a little bit with Republican Respondents, but again not as dramatic as the political rhetoric out of Washington would imply. Where things do get interesting is when we ask about trade with various countries. India is a country that relatively compared to many other developing nations has a very positive brand in the US. In fact when we ask Americans - Do you think that China's trade policies with US is fair or not? Over 60% of Americans say that they don't feel that trade with China is fair. The Trump Administration has really tapped into something very real. Despite the fact being pro trade there is very serious and long held grievances about the role of trade with China has played particularly in the US economy in terms of jobs in middle class America.

Trump and Modi have a very warm relationship, unlike his relationship with many other global leaders. Taking the long view on things and the inherent interest of US in India will continue to converge irrespective of who's in the White House due to the fact that India is a democracy just like the US with its challenges and its flaws. India is organized completely differently than China but these are certainly very real to the American psyche and we see that in our data on US perceptions on India are relatively positive when you compare them to China.

US Public Josh on Trump

15 minutes ago, we released Trump's approval rating which is 39 and is 10 points drop since our last measurement. The last time we saw a drop that significant was in 1992 with Bill Clinton. What's even more interesting is perceptions of how Donald Trump handles the economy. 64% of Americans even before George Floyd started said that they disapprove of the way Trump's handling race relations. But his strong suit has always been how he handles the economy. This latest poll is interesting and Republicans are now beginning to drop in their assessment of how Trump is handling the economy.

New Equations at White House : India versus China

Is a rising China, the elephant in the room to ignore? There's a lot of fear mongering around China. It's very easy to become sort of anti-China in the American narrative and I don't mean to in any way support that but we need to be very honest about American perceptions of China and they're not positive or are unique to the right wing in the US. Trump's approach has been different than any other President we've seen in modern history. Anyone coming into the White House cannot be stepping away from the idea that trade relationship with the US and China needs to be re-evaluated. The difference between the parties is in the rhetoric and what they propose solutions when it comes to international trade and the dynamics with China and India and Asia, you'll find very little in the future. Democrats would try to at least reengage Asia through a trade lens in a way that has a very geopolitical strategy behind. Agreed that people would have seen massive economic boom too many of those economies but really a really big part of it was also geopolitical and security driven, so those interests will remain.

Josh of Employees

Our tools track lots of metrics on employee engagement with millions of employees all over the world. We've had an opportunity to really study what happens in a workplace since Covid crisis in the US daily measuring employees engagement. Its counterintuitively in times of crisis. We score whether you're either actively disengaged, disengaged or actively engaged. These different dynamics in different industries its impact on safety, on a bottom line and PE, etc. We find that star employees are more engaged in moments of crisis and become committed to the mission as part of the challenges but only so long and till you run into fatigue after weeks or months depending on the crisis and on when people expect it to be over. Other finding when it comes to employee engagement ties back in our research over decades is the quality of the manager who's leading employees in crisis. Its most critical to make sure you have the right managers in the right situation and they're getting the right support and their leading with their strengths. We've tracked the Josh in the US. This is basically true everywhere in the world.

For healthcare workers, Covid crisis is very local. Healthcare workers in cities that have been worst hit certainly had a very difficult time. Their mission and purpose is extremely high has only increased in these situations that's not in anyway to negate the challenges that they face and the shortage is that many of these teams in the most developed economies and India. It feels like the worst is behind us for this round of the crisis. But obviously expectations of a second round are very daunting both economically and also we don't want to take for granted what we find with the frontline health care workers in the first crisis. I think the shortcomings were massive and the frustration with them was equally expressed in the polling that we've done in the US.

India is no different but there's no reason why the most hardworking of economies won't come back faster than the others. There are structural realities that can change the situation in India. I would expect India to kind of start heating up the fastest and coming back much faster than the mature economies but that's really just economic history sort of repeating. So I think to closeout I'll just say, India's best.
